The 597 students in the Naval War College's Class of 2004 marked the beginning of the academic year in convocation ceremonies in Spruance Hall auditorium last Monday.

Rear Adm. Ronald A. Route, President of the college, addressed the students. He said the coming year will be a life-changing opportunity.

"The year of study you begin today will prove to be a watershed event in your professional careers and in your personal lives," he said. "Something very special is about to begin."

He told the students they will never look at the world in the same way after completing their studies. "You will be shaped by the educational experience, and you will be conditioned to look at the world in a different manner," he said.

Route said the educational opportunity the college offers improves the student's ability to think about real world problems.

Several students have recently returned to the U.S. from Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Navy Lt. Cmdr. Robert Garretson reported from VF2-13, The Black Lions. The squadron flew missions off the aircraft carrier USS Theodore Roosevelt (CVN 71) in the Eastern Mediterranean Sea. He said he is excited about beginning the War College experience.

hard for two years," he said.

Marine Corps Maj. Joseph Monroe, a Fredericksburg, Va., native said he looks forward to the academic environment at the college.

"I enjoy the academic challenge," he said. "I like the mental rigor, the mental gymnastics of reading, analyzing and problem solving."

Monroe reported to the college from the 1st Marine Regiment where he served as the regimental logistics officer. He said he believes the Naval War College will allow him to spend some time on the physical, mental and spiritual aspects of his life.

FEMA war game combines hurricane, terrorism event

By LT. DAVID AUSIELLO
NWC Deputy Public Affairs Officer

The Naval War College (NWC) recently completed a three-day war game exercise involving the U.S. Department of Homeland Security's Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) and emergency management teams from six New England states.

"Operation Yankee" focused on an impending landfall of a Category 4 hurricane along the New England coast, as well as a bio-terrorism event in the region.

"This exercise has allowed us to work multiple simulated events so that we can improve our coordination and preparedness on a regional scale," said Daniel A. Craig, regional director for FEMA Region I. "Many disaster events in New England affect multiple states, and this exercise was a great opportunity to work closely with our federal, state and tribal partners in the region to improve our response plan."

The exercise included emergency management teams from Rhode Island, Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, Vermont and New Hampshire.

DANIEL A. CRAIG, left, Director, Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), Region One, discusses the progress of 'Operation Yankee,' a New England states' war game exercise, with Capt. Terry Cush, Deputy Director of War Gaming at the Naval War College last week.

In future years, FEMA plans to expand the exercise to include New York, New Jersey and the Eastern Canadian Provinces.

"We have been working with FEMA for over a year now to coordinate this rather large scale exercise," said Dr. Kenneth Watman, Director of War Gaming at the college.

"This game gave New England emergency response teams an opportunity to come together and find out what plans work and what plans may need some fine tuning."

"With forecasts for an active hurricane season and the ever-present threat of a terrorist event, this exercise couldn't be happening at a better time for our region," said Craig.

Craig says the exercises emphasized the need for constant communication through FEMA, Page 13

Providence tests terror response

Providence Mayor David Cicilline and other city officials took part in a war gaming exercise at the Naval War College, on July 29 and 30, that replicated a real-life terrorist incident.

The officials reviewed Providence emergency management procedures for responding to an incident.

The war game allowed for critical thinking and the sharing of ideas to fine-tune communications, department organization, policies and operations, said Professor Kenneth Watman, chairman of the War Gaming Department at the Naval War College.

Watman said dealing with a terrorist attack, particularly with weapons of mass destruction, poses a unique problem for cities.

Coast Guard mixes fun with annual training

By RICHARD ALEXANDER

Navalog editor and
KIM MALLOZZI
NAVSTA Public Affairs Staff

About 200 Coast Guardsmen attached to the First Coast Guard District, mixed training with a little competition last week at the Aids to Navigation (AtoN) 2003 Training and Readiness Workshop at Naval Station (NAVSTA) Newport.

The district ranges from Maine to Shrewsbury River, N.J., and this year involved seven visiting buoy tenders and icebreaking tugs representing 27 AtoN units afloat and ashore.

In addition to the buoy tenders Juniper, Willow and Ida Lewis already homeported at NAVSTA, the visiting "black hulls" included 140-foot ice-breaking tugs and 65-foot harbor tugs.

Lt. Casey Hehr, operations officer for the AtoN branch in Boston, said 15 courses in professional development and training were offered, ranging from family advocacy, to engine maintenance and crane and buoy deck safety operations, to AtoN servicing at sea.

Facilities were used at the Surface Warfare Officers School Command trainers, Perry Hall classrooms, Building 68 on Pier Two, Training Pool 307, and the Officer Training Command's Buttercup damage control trainer and Fire Fighter Trainer.

On Thursday, the cutter Abbey Burgess conducted an oil skimming equipment exercise by embarking a Vessel of Opportunity Skimming System (VOSS). About 30 Coast Guard members, in protective overalls, mustered at Pier Two.

VOSS provides state of the art oil containment and recovery, and is designed to be transported by truck to an oil spill site, and embarked aboard any suitable ship for an oil-recovery platform.

The system includes a floating centrifugal oil skimmer, two collapsible inflatable barges to hold the recovered oil, a crane to lower the skimmer into the water, outrigger booms to GOING UP — In a shipboard rescue swimmer's exercise, the 'victim' is secured in a rescue basket to be lifted aboard the cutter Katherine Walker of Bayonne, N.J., at Pier Two. corral the spilled oil, plus compressors on board to work the pumps.

"The day is going well so far; the whole event takes longer when we're practicing because of the learning process," said Lt. Rebecca Drew, who monitored the entire procedure.

The previous day, the cutter Juniper deployed offshore to demonstrate the onboard Spilled Oil Recovery System (SORS); and shipboard rescue swimmer exercises were held from the cutter Katherine Walker of Bayonne, N.J.

The Harbor Island Conference Center was the site of an AtoN Trade Show where manufacturers and distributors from as far as Australia displayed AtoN electronics and brighter and longer-lasting Light Emitting Diodes (LEDs) for signal buoys.

Ira Krams of Automatic Power Inc./Pharos Marine in Virginia said the new LED lamps are warranted for 100,000 hours over the current incandescent bulbs.

THE VICTIM waits for the rescue swimmer to reach him off Pier Two.

"The Coast Guard is currently evaluating several hundred LED lanterns in AtoNs along the coast," he said. "They're more expensive, but the payback is quickly realized."

Lt. Hehr said in the months after Sept. 11, the Coast Guard was transferred from the Department of Transportation to the new Department of Homeland Security, and about 90 percent of its time was dedicated to "Maritime Domain Awareness."

"Now we're balancing our mission better," he said. "We're back up to about 40 percent of our time on AtoN maintenance, law enforcement of fisheries, search and rescue demands, and oil spill recovery duties."

But Hehr said, come the anniversary of the terrorist attacks, most of the Coast Guard's East Coast assets will be assigned to New York City.

The Navy Newport week began with competition, the AtoN Olympics, won by the cutter Willow at Pier 2. The games involved rescue swimming races, "heat and beat" shackle pin hammering by commanding officers, line tossing for distance and accuracy, and buoy mooring chain dragging.

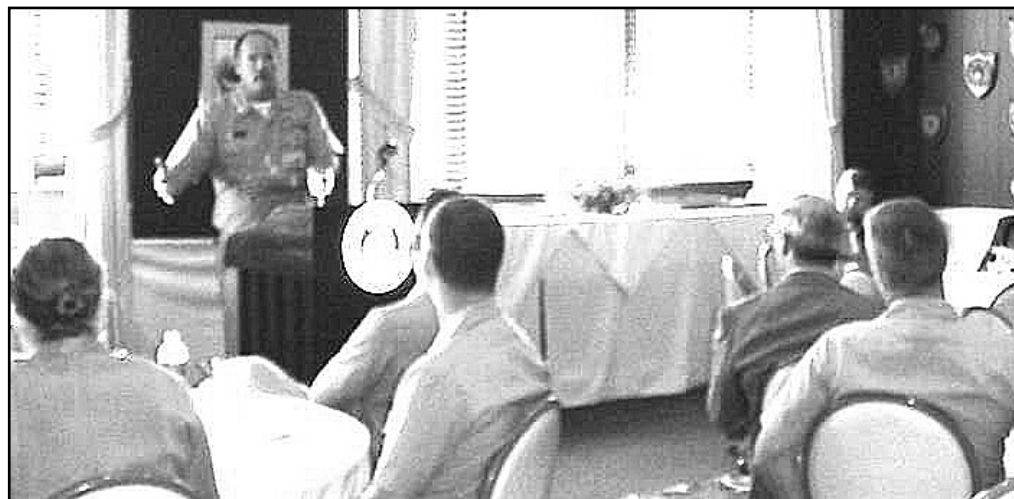

On Monday afternoon, the Coast Guardsmen celebrated Coast Guard Day with a barbecue and chili cookoff, followed by a softball tournament at the Carr Point Recreation Area.

Rear Adm. Vivien S. Crea, Commander, First Coast Guard District, addressed the Coast Guardsmen on Tuesday.

Naval veteran of Iraq calls post-war situation troubling

By YNC GINAMARIE DOHERTY
SWOSCOLCOM Public Affairs Officer

Lt. Cmdr. Karl R. Olsen, an instructor at the Surface Warfare Officers' School Command (SWOSCOLCOM) and veteran of Operation Iraqi Freedom, was guest speaker at the Surface Navy Association's July 30 luncheon at the Officers' Club.

He was deployed to the Middle East for six months last January with Combined Joint Task Force-4.

Olsen, currently Code 30 Amphibious Warfare Leader at SWOS, was maritime plans officer based at Camp Doha in Kuwait. After Umm Qasr was seized by American special forces, his team opened the port for shipping, then moved into Baghdad to restore power, water and medical services to the Iraqi people.

He said the three phases of Operation Iraqi Freedom were "robust and pretty thorough" for shaping the battlefield and conducting decisive combat operations. The post-war Iraq situation, however, was never addressed properly and is troubling, he said.

"The force flow and troop movements were pretty well scripted," he said. "We did plan for more forces through Turkey, but from the Navy point of view, we did a pretty good job."

He said aircraft carrier aviation operations performed well, the Marines went ashore, and the U.S. quickly gained and maintained maritime supremacy to include mine sweeping and mine clearance in Umm Qasr.

In Baghdad, Olsen said his team worked closely with the Army Corps of Engineers, USAID, and a few World Relief agencies. Joint Task Force-4 was disbanded and re-deployed, with the exception of most U.S. Army personnel, last June 15 back to the U.S.

Olsen said he suspects Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez, Commander, Joint Task Force-7, and Army forces will face many problems and challenges in the future.

"As I see it, the biggest unresolved issues will be issuing a peace proclamation based on a stable Iraqi government, and a police/military force to enforce and maintain order in the country," he said.

In a follow-up question and answer session, Olsen was asked what he thought would be the future naval presence in Iraq. Olsen said he envisioned the same continued representation from naval forces.

He said living conditions in Iraq are harsh with the extreme summer heat. The U.S. forces camped in abandoned places like palaces and warehouses, or set up tents, none of which had windows nor air conditioning.

Olsen said re-building efforts included both servicemembers and Iraqi personnel working side-by-side to re-build the country's telephone and TV broadcast communications, water and power utilities, reinstate public officials, and reestablish a police force.

"There was a combined effort to establish a stable environment," he said. Help from other allied nations is minimal. The neighboring countries of Kuwait and Saudi Arabia have supplied mostly just food and water.

Lt. Cmdr. Joseph W. Hyde, an instructor at the Surface Warfare Officers School Command and who also served with Olsen, was recognized at a recent awards ceremony on July 17 for his role in Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Capt. Mark Buzby, Commanding Officer, SWOSCOLCOM spoke about how proud he is of Hyde for representing the surface warfare community and the Navy in the war efforts.

all levels, from the federal government down to the cities and towns.

“We must improve our communications,” he said. “And we must coordinate our population evacuation moves, if need arises.”

He said each state must make sure its National Guard assets are available in emergencies, realizing that with Operation Iraqi Freedom many reservists are deployed and unavailable.

“We learned there must be coordination in the public health field to ensure public safety, and we must work with the private business sector because it owns 90 percent of the infrastructure for transportation, communications and utilities.”

Maj. Gen. Reginald Centracchio, R.I. National Guard adjutant general, said the War College has been invaluable to Rhode Island in wargaming. The state enjoys an advantage in pre-planning over other states in the region.

“How we share information will impact on adjacent states,” he said.

Centracchio also praised FEMA for understanding the importance of clear information to the public.

“There must be one message, one voice to the public to keep them informed. We must avoid mixed information,” he said.

Over 300 federal, state and tribal officials took part in the exercise at the college’s war gaming facility in McCarty-Little Hall.

War gaming has been an integral part of the college since 1887 and in response to the terror war, the War Gaming Department has been creating and strategizing war games to help civilian authorities meet the needs of Homeland Defense.

The college has hosted over 800 homeland security games since the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

Providence

“It’s a problem different from any the people in leadership positions of the safety forces and in the leadership positions of cities have ever encountered before.”

He said a terrorist attack with weapons of mass destruction literally involves every state and federal agency. The college began providing these scenarios to civilian organizations in response to the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

“We really enjoyed working with the City of Providence,” said Navy Cmdr.

Phil Russell, game director for the Providence exercise.

Cicilline said exercises like this one are vital for preparing a city for emergencies. “Cities are on the front line of homeland security,” he said. “Cities such as Providence need to be prepared, and we need to test the plans we have in place to be sure our leadership and agencies can respond as effectively as possible.”

The college is planning more war games in the future, possibly with Maryland and Hawaii, said Watman.
